

Nathaniel Klemp is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Politics at Princeton University. His current research focuses on religion, democracy, and deliberative democracy. He is the author of a forthcoming essay in Polity entitled, "Beyond God-Talk: Understanding the Christian Right from the Ground Up." He is currently working on a dissertation entitled The Morality of Spin, which draws on his empirical research on the Christian right to construct a theory of when political spin enhances or diminishes democracy.
