

D. Michael Lindsay is a sociologist at Rice University who specializes in issues surrounding elites, religion, and culture. Recently, Dr. Lindsay completed the largest and most comprehensive study on religious identity among recognized, public leaders in the United States. This research has already received international attention; Lindsay was honored in 2006 at the World Congress of Sociology, where he received the top honor in the worldwide competition for scholars under age 35. His research has also garnered awards from the International Leadership Association, the Society for the Scientific Study of Religion, and the Association for the Sociology of Religion. His long-term research agenda involves reinvigorating the scientific study of elites. With degrees from Baylor, Oxford, and Princeton, Lindsay is now assistant professor of sociology at Rice where he also serves as assistant director and faculty fellow at the Center on Race, Religion, and Urban Life. He is married with one daughter, and he and his family live in Houston, Texas.
