

Jennifer Merolla is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Politics and Policy at Claremont Graduate University. She received her B.A. from Boston College in 1997 and a Ph.D. in Political Science from Duke University in 2003. Her teaching and research focuses on campaigns and elections, public opinion, political psychology, and Congress. She is currently working on projects related to strategic voting, campaign strategy, the effects of campaign messages on Latino turnout and vote choice, and political behavior under times of crisis.