

Rhys H. Williams is Professor of Sociology at the University of Cincinnati. He has authored, co-authored, or edited a number of publications on the intersections of American religion, politics, and social movements, including "A Bridging of Faiths: Religion and Politics in a New England City" (Princeton, 1992), "Cultural Wars in American Politics: Critical Reviews of a Popular Myth" (Aldine, 1997), and "Promise Keepers and the New Masculinity: Publics Politics and Private Morality" (Lexington, 2001). He is currently editor of the Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, and has chaired the American Sociological Association's Sections on Religion (2000-01) and Collective Behavior-Social Movements (2006-07).